

Chris Rowlands is a singer/musician who writes songs about environmental issues and animals. He's a naturalist and works for museums, nature centers and the like, performing his music. Chris has beautiful hand painted backdrops and puppets that he uses along with his presentations. He has audience members come up and sing and dance with him, which they always enjoy. He talks about dinosaurs, extinct animals, sea animals, forest animals, just to name a few of his topics. He incorporates his original songs into the talks. Chris is funny and his music is very up-beat. His fee is very reasonable.

Chris recently created a song about Fiona the baby hippo at the Cincinnati Zoo. The zoo has released a video of Fiona featuring the song. You can listen in here:
